- In New Zealand, he planted more than 150,000 trees in his valley with the help of construction companies and farmers
- His work reflects his philosophy of a compatible interaction between human beings and nature
- He was an opponent of the straight lines in building design, which according to him break correlation between mankind and nature
- He was fascinated by spirals, as he noticed that there are no straight

An aerial view of Maumbury Rings . How could you create a painting of this in the style of Hundertwasser ?

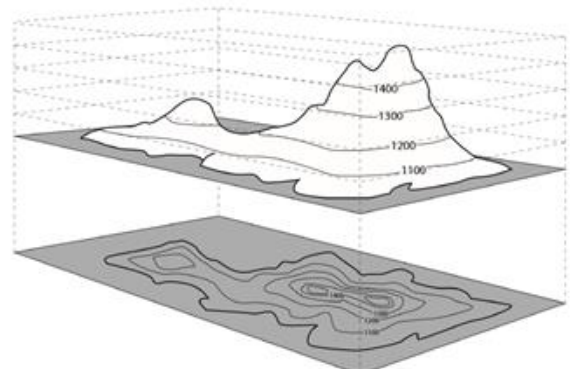

Green Town by Hundertwasser

Much of Hundertwasser's work is from the perspective of an aerial view and resembles the contour lines on a map. Hills, slopes and mountains are represented on a map using contour lines.
